

Address of the President on

Development, Reclamation and Water-Utilization,

Spokane, Washington, July 2, 1923, 8:30 p.m.

Doubtless one who comes from so far east as Ohio, is bound to be regarded when he comes among you people of the farthest Northwest as at least an Easterner; he may reasonably expect to be confused with the Yankees of "Way Down East"; and, I suppose, need not be surprised if he is looked upon as almost an oriental. This is a big country, and our notions of latitude and longitude are largely comparative. I have friends in the southern corner
